

ENGLISH AIRMEN MAKE FIFTY RAIDS IN MAY

Smash Stations, Sidings, Factories—One Bomb Gets Sixty Hun Officers.

(International News Service.)
Washington, July 20.—The activity and effectiveness of the British aviation service was revealed today in official information reaching here, showing that during May, British aeroplanes made fifty-five air raids on Germany. Metz-Sablon was the objective of the largest number of these raids, fifteen different air operations having been made during May on the stations, sidings and railway triangle at that important center. Diederhofen (Thionville) also sustained many attacks from the British airmen, the station and siding there have been bombed fourteen times during May.

Other German towns that felt the power of British bombs dropped from the skies, together with the military objective and the number of raids were as follows: Bensdorf, station and sidings, two; Coblenz, stations and barracks, one; Cologne, stations, factories and barracks, one; Courcelles, station and sidings, two; Each, station and sidings, one; Hagendingen, railway and sidings, one; Karlsruhe, station and sidings, one; Kreuznach, electric power station, four; Landau, barracks, station and sidings and gas works, two; Mannheim, chemical factory, three; Metz, station and sidings, two; Saarbrücken, factory, sidings and station, two; Spittel, station, one.

The result of one of these raids was revealed in a letter captured in Metz, dated May 19, 1918, an extract from which said:

"As we were returning home, about 4:30, the aeroplanes suddenly appeared. We saw how they dropped bombs on Metz. There was a hellish crash such as you never heard. The railway station was hit. The airmen had reason for coming. We had visitors, I know exactly who from a doctor."

In this connection it is interesting to note that a report has been received stating that sixty German officers were killed at, or near, Metz station awaiting the arrival of the Kaiser.

unlimited use of money appropriated to give the boys in khaki all the comforts and implements of war needed.

Senator Shields was especially gratified at the result of the selective service law, which he advocated and which he voted to adopt. He stated, in defending his vote, that the draft law was no respecter of rich or poor, and that it took all classes, which was as it should be.

"I am sorry that I have no sons to offer my country," Senator Shields declared, "but I can say that a number of my relatives have sent their boys to war, and with the exception of one young man they are now at the front. I have never used my influence to secure a commission for any of these boys, for I believe that they should enter the service on the same level as any other young men and win their promotions on merit alone. The same thing applies to the draft. I can truthfully state that I have never written or spoken to a member of any draft board in the state in behalf of any young man."

Informing that the allied armies had begun their offensive with great success, Senator Shields stated that Germany must be defeated and that democracy must rule the earth before the United States and her allies will talk peace. He was greatly elated over the success of the allies on the opening day of their big offensive.

KNOXVILLE TWINS JOIN THE NAVY TOGETHER
(Special to The News.)
Knoxville, July 20.—Inseparable through their twenty-five years of life, Hobart Cupp and McKinley Cupp, twins, joined the navy together here. It was their birthday and they came here from Rogersville, bringing with them a release signed by A. R. Reagan, of the draft board, in which he urged that they be kept together in the navy if possible as they seem to be more happy and work better when not separated. The young men were named for President McKinley and Vice-President Hobart.
